Overview

The worldwide trend towards the full abolition of the death penalty continued during the reporting period for this background paper, from 1 July 2009 to 30 June 2010. Several OSCE participating States have taken significant legal, judicial, political and de facto steps in this regard. Death sentences and execution rates declined in the United States, and the debate on the introduction of a moratorium has increased in intensity in Belarus, although executions continued to be carried out. In the Russian Federation, the Constitutional Court ruled out any possible reinstatement of the death penalty there when it prolonged the existing moratorium on the practice until when, in adherence to the country's international obligations, a formal abolition of the death penalty is put in place.

Two countries that had already fully abolished the death penalty in their domestic legislation also confirmed this at the international level during the reporting period. In Kyrgyzstan, the parliament adopted a law on accession to the Second Optional Protocol of the United Nations International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights, which is aimed at the abolition of the death penalty. It was signed into law by the president in March 2010, but the formal accession is yet to take place. On 19 December 2009, Spain ratified the Council of Europe's Protocol No. 13 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, concerning the abolition of the death penalty in all circumstances.

Nonetheless, two OSCE participating States – the United States and Belarus – continued to carry out executions during the reporting period, and Kazakhstan passed a law expanding the list of crimes for which the death penalty can be imposed as a sentence by one, from eight to nine.

At the international level, on 3 July 2009, the OSCE Parliamentary Assembly adopted the Vilnius Declaration, outlining a set of policy recommendations to the governments of the OSCE participating States.¹ The Declaration, voted on by 213 parliamentarians from 50 OSCE countries, contained a resolution calling upon participating States who maintain the death penalty to declare an immediate moratorium on executions.² It also encourages participating States that have not abolished the death penalty to respect safeguards protecting the rights of those facing these sentences, as laid down in the United Nations Economic and Social Council Safeguards.³

During the reporting period, the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights marked its 20th anniversary, on 15 December 2009. Marking this historic moment, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights called for the universal abolition of capital punishment, urging all states to ratify the Protocol.⁴

The 4th World Congress Against the Death Penalty was held in Geneva from 24 to 26 February 2010. The Final Declaration of the Conference acknowledged positive developments, such as the greater number of countries that have ratified the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and mentioned the commitment by Switzerland and Spain to help “to implement a universal moratorium on executions in 2015”.⁵ At the conference, Italy’s Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Enzo Scotti, declared that his country was planning to present a new resolution to abolish capital punishment worldwide at the United Nations in the fall of 2010.⁶

While there are no OSCE commitments requiring the abolition of the death penalty, the OSCE participating States have committed themselves to only impose capital punishment in a manner not contrary to their international commitments and to keep the question of whether or not to retain the death penalty under consideration.⁷ In addition, the participating States that retain the death penalty in some form have committed themselves to ensuring transparency regarding the practice by making information about its use available to the public.⁸ One of the main purposes of this publication is to provide an opportunity for participating States to make such information available on an annual basis. Accordingly, in June 2010, a questionnaire on the use of the death penalty was sent to each of the six participating States for which there were country entries in the 2009 edition.⁹ Belarus, Kazakhstan, Latvia, the Russian Federation and the United States of America responded to the questionnaire, while no reply was received from Tajikistan. The OSCE Centre in Astana and the OSCE Office in Dushanbe did, however, contribute valuable information. Other information was collected from media reports and reports by NGOs.

As in previous years, it is hoped that the reader will find this background paper to be a useful resource in the further discussion of issues related to the right to life, the application of capital punishment and its abolition.

9 The six participating States that retained the death penalty in some way in 2009 were Belarus, Kazakhstan, Latvia, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and the United States of America. The questionnaire is reproduced in Annex 4. 1. Abolitionist States

On 16 December 2009, Spain ratified Protocol No. 13 to the Council of Europe's Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, concerning the abolition of the death penalty in wartime and in peacetime, becoming the 42nd European Country to do so. Spain had abolished the death penalty in its domestic legislation in 1978.

Although they do not usually result in lasting discussions, issues related to the application of capital punishment also resurface from time to time in abolitionist states. As part of the process leading up the adoption of a law in Kyrgyzstan to ratify the Second Optional Protocol of the International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights, the question of the death penalty was raised again. At a meeting of the National Security Council, in September 2009, the Head of the State Committee for National Security, Murat Sutalinov, reportedly proposed the restoration of capital punishment, arguing chiefly that the death penalty acts as a deterrent to crime.¹⁰ Despite this, on 11 February 2010, Kyrgyzstan's parliament passed the "Law on the Accession of the Kyrgyz Republic to the Second Optional Protocol of the International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights Aiming at the Abolition of the Death Penalty",¹¹ which was signed into law by the then-President Kurmanbek Bakiyev on 17 March 2010.¹²

In Ukraine, the Communist Party proposed that the death penalty be reinstated for grave crimes, and put the question forward in the country's parliament on 16 February 2010.¹³ The request was turned down by an overwhelming majority, with only 32 of the 413 registered deputies voting in favour.¹⁴

The United Nations Human Rights Committee addressed one individual case from Uzbekistan, in which it reached the conclusion that the right to a fair trial had been

2. Partly Abolitionist States

LATVIA

At present, the Criminal Code of Latvia allows for the imposition of death sentences for convictions for murder with aggravating circumstances, and only when committed in wartime.¹⁷ The country is in the process of ratifying Protocol No. 13 to the Council of Europe's Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, concerning the abolition of the death penalty in both wartime and peacetime. On 19 May 2008, the Government of Latvia endorsed a draft law on the ratification of the Protocol. The approval of the parliament is still being sought, and there have been no further developments in the reporting period for the 2010 Background Paper.¹⁸

3. De Facto Abolitionist States

KAZAKHSTAN

In Kazakhstan, the death penalty has been abolished for most cases, except acts of terrorism entailing loss of life and grave crimes committed in wartime.¹⁹ While a law entered into force in 2009 reducing the number of crimes for which death sentences could be handed down from 18 to eight,²⁰ later legislative developments saw the application of this sentence extended to one additional crime, raising the number to nine.

According to amendments to the Criminal Code signed into law on 14 June 2010, attempting to kill the president of Kazakhstan may be punishable by death.²¹ The newly introduced Article 166-1 of the Criminal Code²² reads that “an attempt upon the life of the First President of the Republic of Kazakhstan – the Nation’s Leader, committed for the purposes of termination of his state activity or out of revenge for such activity, shall be punished by deprivation of freedom for a period from 15 to 20 years, or by capital punishment or life imprisonment”.²³ This development runs against the overall global trend towards the full abolition of the death penalty.

RUSSIAN FEDERATION

A moratorium on the application of the death penalty has been in place in the Russian Federation since 1996, in line with the country’s agreement to abolish capital punishment as a condition for gaining membership in the Council of Europe.²⁴ In 1999, the Constitutional Court ruled that the death penalty could not be applied until all of the country’s then-89 regions had introduced jury trials.²⁵ Chechnya became the final Russian region to institute jury trials, on 1 January 2010. On 29 October 2009, anticipating this event, the Supreme Court of the Russian Federation reportedly sought clarification on the future of the moratorium.²⁶

On 19 November 2009, the Constitutional Court ruled that the moratorium on the death penalty should be extended.²⁷ Court Chairperson Valery Zorkin reportedly confirmed that an “irreversible process to abolish capital punishment” was occurring in Russia.²⁸ The moratorium on executions would be in place until the Russian Federation ratified Protocol 6 to the European Convention on Human Rights, which bans the death penalty. The Russian Federation has signed but not ratified the Protocol. The United Nations Human Rights Committee also noted “with concern that the death penalty [had] yet to be abolished de jure in the State party despite the welcome moratorium on the execution of death sentences in force since 1996”.²⁹

Despite this clear direction set out by the Constitutional Court, debate on the reinstatement of the death penalty occasionally resurfaces. According to reports of a statement made by State Duma Speaker Boris Gryzlov to two visiting members of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, “terrorist activities in Russia have been the factor that has prevented the country from abolishing capital punishment”.³⁰

The issue of retaining the death penalty for those convicted of committing terrorist acts received significant public coverage following the Moscow Metro bombings on 29 March 2010. Immediately after the bombings, the Committee on Judicial and Legal Affairs of the Federation Council, the upper house of the Russian parliament, reportedly began work on a draft law to introduce the death sentence for organizers of terrorist attacks resulting in multiple deaths.³¹ Federation Council Speaker Sergei Mironov, on the other hand, stated that, even in the cases of convicted terrorists, he was “negative about calling off a moratorium on the death penalty.”³² Russian Federation President Dmitry Medvedev was reported as saying on 2 April 2010 that, even though he would not have introduced the death penalty moratorium in Russia in 1996, Russia would adhere to its international obligations.³³

TAJIKISTAN

A moratorium on executions and the handing down of death sentences has been in place in Tajikistan since 15 July 2004. On 30 September 2009, at the annual OSCE Human Dimension Implementation Meeting, in Warsaw, the Tajik delegation stated the clear political will to fully abolish capital punishment in the future. This commitment was reinforced again in April 2010, when President Emomali Rahmon established a working group with the aim of analyzing the social and legal aspects of abolishing the death penalty in Tajikistan.³⁴ The working group is headed by Djumahon Davlatov, State Advisor on Legal Policy in the Executive Office of the President, and consists of government ministers and deputy ministers, as well as the General Prosecutor and the Human Rights Ombudsman. The latter has actively advocated for the full abolition of the death penalty and has pushed it as one his priorities. Several NGOs have been supporting the government's intentions in this area through the development of projects aimed at raising awareness of the issue and engaging in a dialogue on abolishing the death penalty and the general question of the right to life.³⁵

BELARUS

While the background paper for 2009 saw indications that Belarus was slowly moving towards the introduction of a moratorium on the application of the death penalty, in line with Council of Europe standards and requirements for membership,³⁶ monitoring during the reporting period for the 2010 background paper turned up mixed messages on the subject.

Only weeks after 23 June 2009, when the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe voted to restore Special Guest status to Belarus' parliament, on the condition that the country declares a moratorium on the imposition of the death penalty,³⁷ two death sentences were handed down. The two executions were carried out in March 2010, after the creation, on 4 February, of the working group "on the issue of the death penalty as an instrument of punishment”, comprising members of both chambers of the Belarusian parliament.³⁸ As a result, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe decided to suspend high-level contacts with the Belarusian parliament and governmental authorities, noting a “lack of progress towards the standards of the Council and a lack of political will to adhere to its values”.³⁹ Belarus then told an OSCE Permanent Council Meeting in July that “in Belarus, too, there is a movement in favour of gradually limiting the application of (capital) punishment” and that “the Belarusian authorities and, in particular, the national parliament are continuing to give this subject the attention it deserves in order to gradually pave the way for an examination of the possibility of introducing a moratorium on the death penalty”.⁴⁰

Legal Framework

The Constitution of the Republic of Belarus provides that, until it is abolished, the death penalty may be applied in accordance with the law as an exceptional penalty for particularly serious crimes, and only as stipulated in the verdict of a court of law.⁴¹ The Criminal Code states that the death penalty may be imposed for severe crimes connected with the deliberate deprivation of life with aggravating circumstances.⁴² The death penalty is applicable to 12 crimes in peacetime and two additional crimes in times of war.⁴³

Moratorium

There is no moratorium in place on either the handing down of death sentences or on executions.

43 The death penalty is envisaged for the following crimes: “unleashing or conducting a war of aggression” (Article 122 part 2 of the Criminal Code of Belarus), “murder of a representative of a foreign state or international organization with the intention to provoke international tension or war” (Art. 124 part 2), “international terrorism” (Art. 126), “genocide” (Art. 127), “crimes against humanity” (Art. 128), “premeditated, aggravated murder” (Art. 139 part 2), “terrorism” (Art. 289 part 3), “terrorist acts” (Art. 359), “treason accompanied by murder” (Art. 356 part 2), “conspiracy to seize power” (Art. 357 part 3), “sabotage” (Art. 360 part 2), “murder of a police officer” (Art. 362), “use of weapons of mass destruction” (Art. 134), and “murder of a person in violation of the laws and customs of war” (Art. 135 part 3).

Method of execution

The death penalty is carried out by means of shooting.⁴⁴ Relatives are reportedly not informed about the date and/or place of execution.⁴⁵ The bodies of those executed are reportedly not returned to families and their places of burial are not disclosed.⁴⁶

Statistics*Death sentences*

According to official statistics provided by the Supreme Court of Belarus, three individuals were sentenced to death during the reporting period.⁴⁷

Andrei Zhuk, 26 years old at the time of sentencing, was sentenced to death on 17 July 2009 by the Minsk District Court.⁴⁸ After filing an appeal to the Supreme Court, the decision became final on 27 October 2009.⁴⁹

The death sentence handed down to Vasily Yuzepchuk on 29 June 2009 by the Brest Regional Court, became final on 2 October 2009, after his appeal was rejected by the Supreme Court.⁵⁰ After having exhausted domestic remedies, both men submitted complaints to the United Nations Human Rights Committee, claiming that their rights under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights – including the right to a fair trial, torture and the right to life⁵¹ – had been violated.⁵² After reports that both complainants had been executed, the United Nations Human Rights Committee expressed “serious concerns” over the matter.⁵³

On 14 May 2010, Oleg Gryshkovtsov and Andrei Burdyko, who were 29 and 28 years old at the time, respectively, were sentenced to death by firing squad by the

Executions

Two persons were executed during the reporting period in Belarus.⁵⁸ While the dates of the executions of Andrei Zhuk and Vasily Yuzepchuk, both referenced above, were not made public, it is believed that both took place in Minsk around 18 March 2010.⁵⁹ After this information was leaked, four Belarusian activists protesting against the executions were reportedly detained near President Alexander Lukashenko’s office.⁶⁰

Belarus law does not allow for the execution of individuals who were less than 18 years of age at the time of the crime for which they were convicted or of women.⁶² Persons more than 65 years of age also may not be sentenced to death.⁶³

Pardon or commutation

The Constitution gives the President the authority to grant clemency, and death penalties may be commuted to life imprisonment.⁶⁴ No clemencies or commutations were granted during the reporting period, nor were any death sentences changed on appeal.⁶⁵

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Legal Framework

In the United States the death penalty can be handed down by state, federal or military courts. There are currently 16 jurisdictions in the United States in which capital punishment is not used. These are the states of Alaska, Hawaii, Iowa, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Mexico, North Dakota, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island, Vermont, West Virginia, Wisconsin and the District of Columbia.

Moratorium

There is no formal moratorium on executions in place at the federal level in the United States, and responsibilities not vested in the Federal Government by the Constitution are reserved for state governments.

A number of states that have legislation permitting the death penalty have not imposed it within the past 30 years. A formal moratorium on executions instituted in 2000 due to concerns about a high risk of error after “thirteen people have been found to have been wrongfully convicted”⁶⁶ — remains in place in Illinois. While New York has a capital punishment statute (CPL 400.27), part of it has been ruled 62 Art. 59 (1) (2) of the Criminal Code of the Republic of Belarus.

63 Art. 59 (2) (3) of the Criminal Code of the Republic of Belarus.

64 Article 84 (19) of the Constitution of the Republic of Belarus.

unconstitutional by the New York Court of Appeals.⁶⁷ As a result, no defendants may be sentenced to death until the State Legislature corrects the errors in the statute. New Mexico repealed the death penalty for offenses committed after 1 July 2009. Two persons previously convicted remain under sentence of death and one person is currently on trial in a case where the state is asking for the death penalty.⁶⁸

Method of execution

Authorized methods of execution vary from state to state, although most use lethal injection. However, the last four federal execution dates were stayed to allow a federal court to consider whether lethal injection as a method of execution violates the Eighth Amendment of the United States Constitution, which prohibits cruel and unusual punishment.⁶⁹ Although the Supreme Court, in Baze v. Rees, 553 U.S. 35 (2008), rejected a claim that the typical lethal injection protocol, as employed by the federal government and the vast majority of states, constitutes cruel and unusual punishment, a de facto moratorium on executions exists in four states – California, Delaware, Kentucky and Maryland – over lethal-injection issues.⁷⁰

The 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals of Delaware, however, ruled on 1 February 2010 that the death penalty is constitutional, clearing the way for executions to be carried out again in the state.⁷¹ In Nebraska, executions were halted in 2008, when the state's Supreme Court ruled electrocution unconstitutional as a means of execution. Despite the fact that the Nebraska Legislature approved lethal injection as a method of capital punishment in 2009, executions have not been carried out because the new lethal-injection law is currently being challenged in courts.⁷² Executions also remain effectively halted due to issues over lethal injection in Nevada and North Carolina.

A new method of execution was introduced in Ohio on 8 December 2009. Kenneth Biros reportedly became the first person in the United States to be executed with a one-drug, intravenous lethal injection.⁷³

On 2 May 2010, The American Board of Anaesthesiologists decided to revoke the certification of any member who participates in executing a prisoner by means lethal injection.⁷⁴ About half of the 35 states that perform executions, including Virginia and North Carolina, require a doctor to be present.⁷⁵

In Utah, the only state in the United States to offer death-row inmates the choice of a firing squad rather than lethal injection as a method of execution, 3rd District Judge Robin Reese signed, on 3 April 2010, the death warrant for Ronnie Lee Gardner, who chose to die by firing squad. He was executed on 18 June 2010.⁷⁶ The previous time this method had been used in Utah was in 1996.

Statistics

Death sentences

The number of death sentences handed down reportedly continued to decline for the period 1 July 2009 to 30 June 2010, reflecting a continuing trend. Though no official data were received, it is believed that the civilian death-row population was slightly less than indicated in the data received last year.⁷⁷

Executions

During the reporting period, 49 individuals were reportedly executed in the United States.⁷⁸ This number is slightly lower than last year's statistics, with the number of executions carried out in Texas lower by almost 30 per cent. Of the reported executions, 21 were carried out in Texas, nine in Ohio, four in Virginia, three in Alabama, two each in Florida, Georgia, Mississippi and Oklahoma, and one in each of Indiana, Louisiana, Tennessee and Utah.⁷⁹

In Texas, Bobby Wayne Woods was executed on 3 December 2009 despite reported pleas from his lawyers that he was mentally impaired.⁸⁰ In 2002, the United States Supreme Court banned capital punishment for the mentally handicapped, but Texas courts ruled that Mr. Woods' handicap did not meet the Supreme Court's definition of "impaired" and, thus, did not prevent him from being sentenced to capital punishment.⁸¹

International safeguards

The United States Constitution, which applies to both state and federal convictions, prohibits the imposition of the death sentence if the offender was under the age of 18 when the capital offense was committed,⁸² is mentally disabled,⁸³ or is legally insane at the time of the scheduled execution.⁸⁴ Federal law specifically prohibits relying on a defendant's race or national origin in deciding to seek or impose the death penalty, and the federal death penalty statute additionally requires a sentencing jury to certify that the defendant's race was not considered in deciding the sentence.⁸⁵

Fair trial guarantees

On 1 April 2009, the United States Supreme Court decided that federally appointed counsel can represent indigent clients in state clemency procedures in capital cases.⁸⁶ The case raised the issue of whether a federal law that provides lawyers for part of appeals by indigent death-row inmates at the state level guarantees them the continuation of that representation through the state clemency process. The law says that such lawyers are to represent their clients in "all available post-conviction processes", including "proceedings for executive or other clemency". Unites States Supreme Court Justice John Paul Stevens stated that "[i]n authorizing federally funded counsel to represent their state clients in clemency proceedings, Congress ensured that no prisoner would be put to death without meaningful access to the 'fail-safe' of our justice system."

Foreign nationals

On 23 October 2009, the United States and European Union signed an extradition agreement that allows European Union Member States to refuse to send suspects

Pardon or commutation

During the reporting period, seven death-row inmates were reportedly acquitted or saw their charges dismissed.⁸⁹ On 14 October 2009, South Carolina issued a posthumous pardon to Thomas and Meeks Griffin, two brothers who had been executed on 29 September 1915 for the killing of a Confederate veteran of the United States Civil War.⁹⁰

Moratorium on the use of the death penalty,
UN General Assembly Resolution 62/149, 18 December 2007⁹¹

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles contained in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, ⁹¹ Another resolution was adopted by the UN General Assembly one year later, on 18 December 2008, on the implementation of the 2007 General Assembly resolution 62/149, UN Doc. A/63/430/Add.2, draft res. I., 18 December 2008.

Recalling also the resolutions on the question of the death penalty adopted over the past decade by the Commission on Human Rights in all consecutive sessions, the last being its resolution 2005/59, in which the Commission called upon States that still maintain the death penalty to abolish it completely and, in the meantime, to establish a moratorium on executions,

Recalling further the important results accomplished by the former Commission on Human Rights on the question of the death penalty, and envisaging that the Human Rights Council could continue to work on this issue,

Considering that the use of the death penalty undermines human dignity, and convinced that a moratorium on the use of the death penalty contributes to the enhancement and progressive development of human rights, that there is no conclusive evidence of the death penalty's deterrent value and that any miscarriage or failure of justice in the death penalty's implementation is irreversible and irreparable,

Welcoming the decisions taken by an increasing number of States to apply a moratorium on executions, followed in many cases by the abolition of the death penalty,

1. Expresses its deep concern about the continued application of the death penalty;
2. Calls upon all States that still maintain the death penalty to:
 - (a) Respect international standards that provide safeguards guaranteeing the protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, in particular the minimum standards, as set out in the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/50 of 25 May 1984;
 - (b) Provide the Secretary-General with information relating to the use of capital punishment and the observance of the safeguards guaranteeing the protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty;
 - (c) Progressively restrict the use of the death penalty and reduce the number of offences for which it may be imposed;
 - (d) Establish a moratorium on executions with a view to abolishing the death penalty;
3. Calls upon States which have abolished the death penalty not to reintroduce it;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution;
5. Decides to continue consideration of the matter at its sixty-third session under the same agenda item.

III. Minimum standards paper

Where states insist on maintaining the death penalty, the EU considers it important that the following minimum standards should be met:

- i) Capital punishment may be imposed only for the most serious crimes, it being understood that their scope should not go beyond intentional crimes with lethal or other extremely grave consequences. The death penalty should not be imposed for non-violent acts such as financial crimes, religious practice or expression of conscience and sexual relations between consenting adults nor as a mandatory sentence.
- ii) Capital punishment may be imposed only for a crime for which the death penalty was prescribed at the time of its commission, it being understood that if, subsequent to the commission of the crime, provision is made by law for the imposition of a lighter penalty, the offender shall benefit thereby.
- iii) Capital punishment may not be imposed on:
 - persons below 18 years of age at the time of the commission of their crime;
 - pregnant women or new mothers;
 - persons who have become insane.
- iv) Capital punishment may be imposed only when the guilt of the person charged is based upon clear and convincing evidence leaving no room for alternative explanation of the facts.

- v) Capital punishment must only be carried out pursuant to a final judgement rendered by an independent and impartial competent court after legal proceedings, including those before special tribunals or jurisdictions, which gives all possible safeguards to ensure a fair trial, at least equal to those contained in Article 14 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, including the right of anyone suspected of or charged with a crime for which capital punishment may be imposed to adequate legal assistance at all stages of the proceedings, and where appropriate, the right to contact a consular representative.
- vi) Anyone sentenced to death shall have an effective right to appeal to a court of higher jurisdiction, and steps should be taken to ensure that such appeals become mandatory.
- vii) Where applicable, anyone sentenced to death shall have the right to submit an Individual complaint under International procedures; the death sentence will not be carried out while the complaint remains under consideration under those procedures; the death penalty will not be carried out as long as any related legal or formal procedure, at the international or at the national level, is pending.
- viii) Anyone sentenced to death shall have the right to seek pardon or commutation of the sentence. Amnesty, pardon or commutation of the sentence of death may be granted in all cases of capital punishment. ix) Capital punishment may not be carried out in contravention of a state's international commitments.
- x) The length of time spent after having been sentenced to death may also be a factor.

Extract from European Parliament resolution of 1 February 2007 on the initiative in favour of a universal moratorium on the death penalty

The European Parliament,

1. Reiterates its long-standing position against the death penalty in all cases and under all circumstances and expresses once more its conviction that the abolition of the death penalty contributes to the enhancement of human dignity and to the progressive development of human rights;
2. Calls for a worldwide moratorium on executions to be established immediately and unconditionally with a view to the worldwide abolition of the death penalty, through a relevant resolution of the current UN General Assembly, whose actual implementation the UN Secretary-General should be able to monitor.

RELEVANT RECOMMENDATIONS MADE AT THE 2009 OSCE HUMAN DIMENSION IMPLEMENTATION MEETING

During the 2009 OSCE Human Dimension Implementation Meeting, held in Warsaw from 28 September to 8 October 2009, views were also exchanged on the question of the abolition of the death penalty.⁹² Working Session 4: Rule of law II addressed the issues of capital punishment, the prevention of torture and the protection of human rights in fighting terrorism. The majority of interventions focused on the death penalty and the prevention of torture.

Ambassador Janez Lenarčič, the Director of ODIHR, highlighted the steady decrease in the use of capital punishment, with Uzbekistan being the 50th participating State to abolish it, in 2008. Many speakers urged for the abolition of capital punishment and for an immediate moratorium on its use. The recent adoption of the OSCE Parliamentary Assembly resolution on a moratorium on the death penalty and towards its abolition was generally welcomed. Some speakers mentioned the need of awareness-raising exercises. It was also noted that capital punishment does not prevent crime and that it does not make our societies any safer. Moreover, the imposition of capital punishment generates many problems and risks, including that of judicial errors that lead to the execution of innocent people.

The following recommendations were made:

- The two OSCE participating States where executions still take place should abolish capital punishment and, in the meantime, adopt a moratorium on capital punishment.
- All participating States that still maintain the possibility to apply capital punishment should abolish it for all crimes.
- There should be a moratorium on the death penalty and an affirmation of the right to life.
- National parliaments should form coalitions against the death penalty.
