She also participated in the inauguration of the National Agency for Information Society (NAIS). Created in April 2007, NAIS will now serve as the coordinating body for such e-government services as e-registration of businesses, e-procurement and tax e-filing, all of which benefit businesses and the public at large. ANTI-CORRUPTION

USAID Releases Findings of 2008 Corruption Survey

On May 7 2008, USAID released the findings of its 2008 Survey Corruption in Albania: Perceptions and Experience. This was the third annual public opinion survey funded by USAID that tracks both the perceptions of ordinary citizens, judges, and public officials as well as their experience with corruption. This year's survey findings show that overall perceived corruption is high, with 92 percent of Albanians saying that it is "widespread" or somewhat widespread" among public officials, a deterioration of eight points since 2006. Reported bribery remains at high levels, especially in the health sector. At the launch of the findings, the U.S. Ambassador John L. Withers II, called for tougher government sanctions for lawbreakers and the lifting of immunity from prosecution of government officials as vital in fighting corruption. He also stressed the responsibility of all Albanians to find solutions to this problem.

Moving ahead: Implementing the World Bank's Governance and Anticorruption Agenda in Albania "Through identification of problems towards their solution"

The Government identified procurement as a key entry point to enhance good governance and anticorruption measures in the public sector. The Country Management Unit for Albania, with the technical support from the Eastern Europe and Central Asia (ECA) Procurement Unit, designed a list of procurement activities to implement the WB's Governance and Anticorruption Agenda at the country and the portfolio levels. From 19 to 21 May 2008, the WB provided training in Tirana for the Public Procurement Agency (PPA). The WB's Country Manager in Tirana, Camille Nuamah, opened the workshop and congratulated the PPA for the improvements in the legal framework and creation of the electronic procurement system. The event was a chance to discuss current procedures of the public procurement law. The WB engaged in talks with the PPA and discussed a WB initiative to explore using the Albania electronic portal for the publication of all WB financed business opportunities. This initiative (which would increase competition and enhance transparency) was welcomed by the national authorities as well as the Millennium Challenge Corporation which is currently providing support to the e-procurement platform. An action plan was also agreed. The WB Procurement Team met with all the project implementing units, and gave a presentation on "red flags on procurement". The presentation was an open discussion on what the Bank and the clients could do to strengthen governance and reduce opportunities of possible fund mismanagement. Other activities, including an outreach training event to the private sector on how to bid in WB financed bids, have been scheduled for 2008.
