What is Public Private Dialogue?

PPD is a participatory decision making process that identifies economic problems and proposes solutions for a better investment climate.
PPD: Driver of Good Governance

- Transparent policy-making by engaging a wide range of public and private stakeholders

- Participatory decision-making at local level and integration of local decisions into national policies

- Government listens to constraints of private sector

- Promotes democratic principles in practice
Key benefits

- PPD accelerates the economic reform process, because:
  - PPD leads to refined, locally-relevant policies
  - PPD fosters ownership, making reforms easier to implement.
  - Stakeholders can hold each other accountable on process and commitments. In Tajikistan, implementation of decisions is also reported to the President.

PPD Results achieved

- Mechanism for submission of proposals from the private sector to the Government
- Private sector is involved in the development of economic policies and laws
- Four regional Councils for PPD were created
- In 2009 and 2010 Tajikistan was recognized as top-reformer country by the World Bank Report "Doing Business".
PPD as conflict-prevention measure

- Early conflict assessment
  Dialogue helps identify public sentiment about structural problems and address them through right policies in the social and economic spheres

- Builds trust
  PPD contributes to social cohesion by building trust and understanding between businesses and the state

Partnership with OSCE

PPD in remote Rasht Valley

- The Rasht Valley, vulnerable to economic and political security challenges, enjoyed limited development and donor support

- Build confidence between state and local stakeholders, re-focus development effort on Rasht

- Government – OSCE partnership to foster bottom-up approach to development policy making
