COMMENTS ON THE AMENDMENTS TO THE LAW OF THE REPUBLIC OF ARMENIA ON BROADCASTING

The review has been prepared by Dr. Andrei Richter, Director of the Media Law & Policy Centre at the faculty of journalism of the Lomonosov Moscow State University, professor and head of the media law department there, member of the International Commission of Jurists (ICJ) and the co-chair of the Law Section of the International Association for Media and Communication Research (IAMCR).

Having analysed the bill of the Republic of Armenia on amendments to the broadcasting law in the context of the Constitution and existing legislation of the Republic of Armenia, as well as international norms on freedom of information and media, the expert commissioned by the Office of the Representative on Freedom of the Media of the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) has come to the following conclusion.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COMMENTS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

The right to freedom of expression is connected with the right to freedom of the media, guaranteed by a variety of documents of the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE), with which Armenia has expressed its agreement. The primary goal of regulating the activities of the media is to promote the development of independent and pluralistic media, thereby ensuring the population’s right to receive information from diverse sources.

There is a positive obligation of the UN member states to promote freedom of the media, which consists in the need to develop pluralism within the media and ensure equal access for all to them.

While the right to freedom of the media is not absolute, and in a few specific circumstances it may be restricted, by virtue of the fundamental nature of this right, however, the restrictions must be precise and specifically determined in accordance with the principles of a rule-of-law state. This also refers to the quality of the law under the review.

Any state authorities empowered to regulate the media must be completely independent of the government and protected against interference on the part of political and business circles.

Public service broadcasting is one of the basic tools of democracies indispensable in ensuring the freedom and transparency of elections, in fighting against hate speech, and in protecting the minority cultures of a country by offering objective news reporting and by broadcasting high quality programmes.

The aim of the bill as stated in the Justification to the bill is to ensure “conformity with the… implementation of the Republic of Armenia-European Union Action Plan within the European Neighbourhood Policy”. It envisages the need to use this legal instrument “to further expand television and radio broadcasting services and raise their quality”, “to ensure wide access to and availability of diverse television-radio broadcasting, efficient use of frequency domains”, as well as “the development of the information market and free competition” in Armenia.

The draft law presents a new edition of the Law of the Republic of Armenia “On television and radio” (LA-97, of 9 October 2000). Most recently this law was extensively amended in 2009. In fact it is not a new law but a set of amendments and additions to the existing statute, some related to the changes due to digital switchover, but many others making corrections and clarifications that are not necessarily connected to the declared aims of the bill. Quite a number of amendments bear declaratory character. There are repetitions that create confusion. There are several vague norms that will probably lead to conflicts among enforcing authorities, as well as norms that are hard to implement. The draft law does not introduce new approaches to regulation of broadcasting. Overall majority of the articles are the same as in the acting law, although their order sometimes changes.

The bill contains a few positive changes into the current broadcasting law of Armenia. They limit possibility of a person to found several companies of his own that will eventually obtain a license for each; forbid deputies and state servants become members of the National Television and Radio Commission (hereinafter – National Commission or NTRC); and extend the licence term for over-the-air broadcasters from 7 to 10 years.

The draft law defines and operates a number of terms and concepts anew and ignores that they have already been developed in the sphere of broadcasting and audiovisual media services in Europe. This relates to the definitions and legal regime for works of domestic and non-domestic origin, re-broadcasting of foreign programmes, sponsorship, and broadcasting in minority languages. This leads to contradictions of the draft law with the European legal standards of broadcasting and other audiovisual media services.

The draft law does not provide clear rules if any for satellite broadcasting, mobile and Internet-provided broadcasting while in practice such regulation is enforced. It makes a deliberate attempt to put all forms and types of audiovisual media services under strict regime of licensing (or permissions) of the NTRC and subject them to bureaucratic scrutiny and discretion.

The draft law removes from the current obligations of the National Commission to make public at least once a year the frequency plan. This makes the procedures of licensing and tenders, the exact capacity and number of multiplexes blurred and subject to different interpretations and bureaucratic discretion.

The draft law indefinitely delays the possibility to establish private multiplexers for digital television and radio while it orders analogue broadcasting to be terminated in the entire territory of Armenia on 20 July 2013. Thus it makes deliberate barriers on the establishment of private operators of digital broadcasting, local or national, violates competition rules and guarantees of the equality of the forms of property.

Article 22 of the draft law provides a long list of programmes and their elements that if broadcast lead to a termination of the term of the license by outright discretionary powers of the NTRC (Art. 61). For example, complete termination of broadcasting of a station occurs by order of the NTRC in repeated incidents of dissemination of state or other secrets protected by law, defaming persons, violating presumption of innocence, worship of cruelty, disparaging the family, pornography, etc. No expertise or court decision is necessary for such an abridgement of freedom of expression. This provision obviously leads to self-censorship of journalists and limitations of freedom of the media.

The draft law no longer provides that the National Commission is obliged to properly explain its decision to reject an application for a broadcast license; neither the draft puts responsibility on the NCTR to promote diversity of opinion on the airwaves. The fact that the bill establishes thematic directions of the digital TV channels should not remove these obligations of the national regulator.

There are substantial flaws in the draft law that regard selection and appointment of the members of the Council for Public Television and Radio (hereinafter – Council). By definition they do not represent political and ideological groups, although are supposed to ensure pluralism (according to their oath). They do not represent pluralistic views by the method of appointment (by the President).

The proposed scheme of financing public broadcasting and regulatory bodies in the sector provides for the majority in the parliament to sanction or support them at ease, thus rendering them dependent on such majority. In this way, instead of following public duty, the “independent public broadcaster” and “independent regulator” will exercise self-censorship.

The bill in a number of articles puts public broadcasting under control of the National Commission. It makes the broadcaster dependent on two overseeing bodies – the Council and the NTRC, appointed (elected) differently and as a result possibly issuing different or even conflicting orders. There is not enough clear division of their competence in regards to public broadcasting thus leading to further conflicts over boundaries of such a division.

The Office of the OSCE Representative on Freedom of the Media has consistently supported the preparation of a more liberal law on broadcasting in Armenia, which would envisage participation by non-governmental organizations in its drafting and would facilitate promotion of freedom of expression and freedom of the media in Armenia.

The proposed version of the Draft Law, however, raises doubts that the numerous appeals of the OSCE Representative on Freedom of the Media concerning broadcasting legislation, have been adequately reflected in the draft law proposed for discussion.

Having analysed the draft law on broadcasting the expert comes to the following main recommendations:

- Apply definitions and rules developed in the sphere of broadcasting and audiovisual media services in pan-European international conventions and treaties.
- Provide clear distinctions of regulating satellite, mobile, Internet-provided broadcasting and non-linear audiovisual media services.
- Keep the current obligations of the National Commission to make public the frequency plan.
- Reinstall provision that the National Commission is obliged to properly explain its decision to reject an application for a broadcast license.
- Reinstall responsibility on the NCTR to promote diversity of opinion on the airwaves.
- Be specific in relation to the number or thematic direction of radio programmes on national and capital multiplexes.
- Lay legal grounds for the establishment of non-state operators of digital broadcasting.
- Eliminate possibility of arbitrary abolishment of the freedom of expression and freedom of the mass media in case of violations by broadcasters of Article 22.
• Change the system of financing Public Television and Radio and that of the National Commission on Television and Radio for an automatic guarantee of their financial independence from the state.

• Reform the system of selecting and appointing members of the Council for Public Television and Radio to provide for a possibility of a pluralistic public broadcasting.

• Remove Public Television and Radio from the competence of the National Commission on Television and Radio, and place it under the sole authority of the Council for Public Television and Radio.

The Office of the OSCE Representative on Freedom of the Media urges the National Assembly to convene a working group that includes representatives of journalistic non-governmental organizations, opposition parliamentarians and other stakeholders, and work on a fundamental revision of the draft law, fully taking into account the remarks and suggestions of the working group members, as well as the recommendations of international organizations and their experts.

CONCLUSION
I. INTERNATIONAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL STANDARDS IN THE SPHERE OF FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION AND FREEDOM OF THE BROADCAST MEDIA

I.1 The significance of freedom of expression and the media

Freedom of expression has long been recognized as one of the most essential human rights. It is of fundamental significance for the functioning of a democracy, it is a necessary condition for exercising other rights and itself constitutes an integral component of human dignity.

The Republic of Armenia is a member of the United Nations. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR), the basic document on human rights, adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations Organization in 1948, protects freedom of expression in the following wording of Article 19:

> Everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression; this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers.¹

The Republic of Armenia is a member of the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE). The Helsinki Final Act declares that “participating States will respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion. They will promote and encourage the effective exercise of civil, political, economic, social, cultural and other rights and freedoms all of which derive from the inherent dignity of the human person and are essential for his free and full development.” The Final Act also states that “participating States will act in conformity with the purposes and principles … of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights”.²

The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR)³ – a United Nations treaty legally binding on and ratified by the Republic of Armenia – guarantees and clarifies the right to freedom of expression in the text of its Article 19:

1. Everyone shall have the right to hold opinions without interference.

2. Everyone shall have the right to freedom of expression; this right shall include the freedom to seek, receive and impart information and ideas of all kinds, regardless of frontiers, either orally, in writing or in print, in the form of art, or through any other media of his choice.

The Human Rights Committee, meeting in New York and Geneva, exercises control over due observance of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. It consists of experts and is empowered to consider applications from individuals claiming to have suffered violations of the rights set forth in the Covenant, including the rights envisaged by Article 19. This Committee has determined that:

The right to freedom of expression is of paramount importance in any democratic society.

Declarations of this type abound in precedent-setting court rulings on human rights throughout the world. The European Court of Human Rights, for instance, has stressed that “freedom of expression constitutes one of the essential foundations of a [democratic] society, one of the basic conditions for its progress and for the development of every man”. As noted in this provision, freedom of expression is of fundamental significance both in itself and as the basis for all other human rights. True democracy is possible only in societies where a free flow of information and ideas is permitted and guaranteed. In addition, freedom of expression is crucial for identifying and disclosing human rights violations and for combating them.

The right to freedom of expression is connected with the right to freedom of the media. Freedom of the media is guaranteed by a variety of documents of the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE), with which Armenia has expressed its agreement, such as the Helsinki Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, the Final Document of the Copenhagen Meeting of the Conference on the Human Dimension of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, the Charter of Paris agreed in 1990, the closing document “Towards a Genuine Partnership in a New Era” of the CSCE Summit in Budapest in 1994, and the Declaration of the OSCE Summit in Istanbul.

5 Case of Handyside v. the United Kingdom, 7 December 1976, Application No. 5493/72, para. 49. The text of the judgment in English can be found on the website of the European Court of Human Rights at: http://cmiskp.echr.coe.int/tkp197/view.asp?item=1&portal=hbkm&action=html&highlight=&sessionid=4647705&skin=hudoc-en.

The Istanbul Charter for European Security of the OSCE states, in particular:

We reaffirm the importance of independent media and free flow of information as well as the public’s access to information. We commit ourselves to take all necessary steps to ensure the basic conditions for free and independent media and unimpeded transborder and intra-State flow of information, which we consider to be an essential component of any democratic, free and open society.\(^{11}\)

The Moscow meeting of the CSCE Conference on the Human Dimension unambiguously agreed that “independent media are essential to a free and open society and accountable systems of government and are of particular importance in safeguarding human rights and fundamental freedoms” and that any restrictions on the right to freedom of expression should be established “in accordance with international standards”\(^{12}\).

A guarantee of freedom of expression is particularly important with respect to the media. This postulate has also been expressed in rulings of human rights courts. In this connection, it should be noted that the three regional human rights protection systems – the American Convention on Human Rights,\(^{13}\) the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR)\(^{14}\) and the African Charter on Human and People’s Rights\(^{15}\) – have reflected global recognition of the significance of freedom of the media and of freedom of expression as the vital human rights. They do contain generally recognized principles of international law. By virtue of this, they serve as important comparable examples of the content and application of the right to freedom of the media and of expression and can be used in interpreting, in particular, Article 19 of the ICCPR, which is binding on the Republic of Armenia.

The European Court of Human Rights always stresses the “pre-eminent role of the press in a State governed by the rule of law”.\(^ {16}\) In particular, it has noted:

*Freedom of the press affords the public one of the best means of discovering and forming an opinion of the ideas and attitudes of their political leaders. In particular, it gives politicians the opportunity to reflect and comment on the preoccupations of public opinion; it thus enables everyone to participate in the free political debate which is at the very core of the concept of a democratic society.\textsuperscript{17}

Moreover, free media, as the United Nations Human Rights Committee has stressed, play a substantial role in the political process:

Free communication of information and ideas about public and political issues between citizens, candidates and elected representatives is essential. This implies a free press and other media able to comment on public issues without censorship or restraint and to inform public opinion.\textsuperscript{18}

In its turn, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights has stated: "It is the mass media that make the exercise of freedom of expression a reality."\textsuperscript{19}

The European Court of Human Rights has also stated that it is incumbent on the media to disseminate information and ideas concerning all spheres of public interest:

Although the press should not cross the boundaries set for [protection of the interests defined in Article 10(2) of the European Convention on Human Rights\textsuperscript{20}]... it is, nevertheless, assigned the mission of disseminating information and ideas of public interest; if the press is set the task of disseminating such information and ideas, the public, for its part, has the right to receive them. Otherwise, the press would be unable to fulfil its function as society’s watchdog”.\textsuperscript{21}

These provisions are reflected in Article 27 and other parts of the Constitution of the Republic of Armenia (of 05.07.1995, with amendments).\textsuperscript{22}

Everyone shall have the right to freely express his/her opinion. No one shall be forced to recede or change his/her opinion.

Everyone shall have the right to freedom of expression including freedom to search for, receive and impart information and ideas by any means of information regardless of the state frontiers.

Freedom of mass media and other means of mass information shall be guaranteed.

The state shall guarantee the existence and activities of an independent and public radio and television service offering a variety of informational, cultural and entertaining programmes.

In addition, Article 3 of the Constitution stipulates that,

The human being, his/her dignity and the fundamental human rights and freedoms are an ultimate value.

The state shall ensure the protection of fundamental human and civil rights in conformity with the principles and norms of the international law.

The state shall be limited by fundamental human and civil rights as directly applicable.

For the purpose of protecting the right to freedom of expression, it is of vital importance for the media to be able to carry out their activities independently of state control. This enables them to function as “society’s watchdog” and provides the public with access to a broad range of views, especially on matters affecting public interests. The primary goal of regulating the activities of the media must, therefore, be to promote the development of independent and pluralistic media, thereby ensuring the population’s right to receive information from diverse sources.

Article 2 of the ICCPR makes the state responsible for “adopting such legislative or other measures as may be necessary to give effect to the rights recognized in the present Covenant.” This means that it is required of states not only to refrain from violating rights but also to undertake positive measures to ensure respect for the rights, including the right to freedom of expression. In fact, states are obliged to create conditions in which diverse and independent media can develop, thereby satisfying the population’s right to information.

An important aspect of states’ positive obligation to promote freedom of expression and freedom of the media consists in the need to develop pluralism within the media and ensure equal access for all to them. The European Court of Human Rights has noted: "[Dissemination] of information and ideas of general interest… cannot be successfully accomplished unless it is grounded in the principle of pluralism".23

The United Nations Human Rights Committee has stressed the role of pluralistic media in the process of national construction, noting that attempts to force the media to engage in propaganda of “national unity” infringe on the right to freedom of expression: The legitimate objective of safeguarding and indeed strengthening national unity under difficult political circumstances cannot be achieved by attempting to muzzle advocacy of multi-party democracy, democratic tenets and human rights.\textsuperscript{24}

\section*{1.2 Restrictions on freedom of expression and freedom of broadcasting media}

Article 43 of the Constitution of the Republic of Armenia stipulates:

\begin{quote}
Limitations on fundamental human and civil rights and freedoms may not exceed the scope defined by the international commitments assumed by the Republic of Armenia.
\end{quote}

It cannot be disputed that the right to freedom of expression is not absolute: in a few specific circumstances it may be restricted. By virtue of the fundamental nature of this right, however, the restrictions must be precise and specifically determined in accordance with the principles of a rule-of-law state. In addition, the restrictions must pursue legitimate goals; the right may not be restricted merely because a statement or expression is seen as insulting or because it challenges accepted dogmas.

The European Court of Human Rights has emphasized that such declarations deserve protection:

\begin{quote}
[Freedom of expression] is applicable not only to "information" or "ideas" that are favourably received or regarded as inoffensive or as a matter of indifference, but also to those that offend, shock or disturb the State or any sector of the population. Such are the demands of that pluralism, tolerance and broadmindedness without which there is no "democratic society".\textsuperscript{25}
\end{quote}

Besides, the boundaries within which legitimate restrictions on freedom of expression may be permitted are established in Article 19, paragraph 3 of the ICCPR quoted above:

\begin{quote}
The exercise of the rights provided for in paragraph 2 of this article carries with it special duties and responsibilities. It may therefore be subject to certain restrictions, but these shall only be such as are provided by law and are necessary:

(a) For respect of the rights or reputation of others;

(b) For the protection of national security or of public order (ordre public), or of public health or morals.
\end{quote}

\textsuperscript{25} Case of Handyside v. the United Kingdom, 7 December 1976, Application No. 5493/72, para. 49. The text of the judgment in English can be found on the website of the European Court of Human Rights at: http://cmiskp.echr.coe.int/tkp197/view.asp?item=1&portal=hbkm&action=html&highlight=&sessionid=4647705&skin=hudoc-en.
Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights ratified by the Republic of Armenia reads as follows:

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers. This Article shall not prevent States from requiring the licensing of broadcasting, television or cinema enterprises.

2. The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary.

According to the settled case-law of the European Court of Human Rights, the expression “prescribed by law”, which is also used in Articles 9 and 11 of the Convention on Human Rights, and the expression “in accordance with the law”, used in Article 8 of the Convention, not only require that an interference with the rights enshrined in these Articles should have some basis in domestic law, but also refer to the quality of the law in question. That law should be accessible to the persons concerned and formulated with sufficient precision to enable them – if need be, with appropriate advice – to foresee, to a degree that is reasonable in the circumstances, the consequences which a given action may entail.

In addition, domestic law must afford a measure of legal protection against arbitrary interferences by public authorities with the rights guaranteed by the Convention on Human Rights. In matters affecting fundamental rights it would be contrary to the rule of law, one of the basic principles of a democratic society enshrined in the Convention, for a legal discretion granted to the executive to be expressed in terms of an unfettered power. Consequently, the law must indicate the scope of any such discretion conferred on the competent authorities and the manner of its exercise with sufficient clarity, having regard to the legitimate aim of the measure in question, to give the individual adequate protection against arbitrary interference. As regards licensing procedures in particular, the Court reiterates that the manner in which the licensing criteria are applied in the licensing process must provide sufficient guarantees against arbitrariness.

1.3 Regulatory authorities for the broadcasting sector

26 See, among many other authorities, Maestri v. Italy [GC], no. 39748/98, § 30, ECHR 2004-I.

It is generally accepted today that any state authorities empowered to regulate the media must be completely independent of the government and protected against interference on the part of political and business circles. Otherwise, regulation of the media might easily become subject to abuse for political or commercial purposes. The three special representatives on the right to freedom of expression noted that:

> All public authorities which exercise formal regulatory powers over the media should be protected against interference, particularly of a political or economic nature, including by a process for appointing members that is transparent, allows for public input and is not controlled by any particular political party.\(^{29}\)

Article 83.2 of the Constitution of Armenia provides for the establishment of an independent regulator in the broadcasting sector in the following terms:

> To ensure the goals of freedom, independence and plurality of the broadcasting media, an independent regulatory body shall be established by the law, half of whose members shall be elected by the National Assembly for a six-year term while the other half shall be appointed by the President of the Republic for a six-year term. The National Assembly shall elect the members of this body by a majority of its votes.

Concerning specific regulations of the broadcasting media, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe adopted on 20 December 2000 Recommendation Rec(2000)23 to member states on the independence and functions of regulatory authorities for the broadcasting sector, in which it recommended that the Member States, inter alia, “include provisions in their legislation and measures in their policies entrusting the regulatory authorities for the broadcasting sector with powers which enable them to fulfill their missions, as prescribed by national law, in an effective, independent and transparent manner, in accordance with the guidelines set out in the appendix to this recommendation”.

The guidelines appended to Recommendation Rec(2000)23, provide, as relevant:

3. The rules governing regulatory authorities for the broadcasting sector, especially their membership, are a key element of their independence. Therefore, they should be defined so as to protect them against any interference, in particular by political forces or economic interests.

4. For this purpose, specific rules should be defined as regards incompatibilities in order to avoid that:

– regulatory authorities are under the influence of political power;

– members of regulatory authorities exercise functions or hold interests in enterprises or other organisations in the media or related sectors, which might lead to a conflict of interest in connection with membership of the regulatory authority.

5. Furthermore, rules should guarantee that the members of these authorities:

– are appointed in a democratic and transparent manner;
– may not receive any mandate or take any instructions from any person or body;
– do not make any statement or undertake any action which may prejudice the independence of their functions and do not take any advantage of them.

13. One of the essential tasks of regulatory authorities in the broadcasting sector is normally the granting of broadcasting licences. The basic conditions and criteria governing the granting and renewal of broadcasting licences should be clearly defined in the law.

14. The regulations governing the broadcasting licensing procedure should be clear and precise and should be applied in an open, transparent and impartial manner. The decisions made by the regulatory authorities in this context should be subject to adequate publicity.

27. All decisions taken and regulations adopted by the regulatory authorities should be:

– duly reasoned, in accordance with national law;
– open to review by the competent jurisdictions according to national law;
– made available to the public.

Such independence of the broadcast regulator is a well-established principle in Europe, most recently confirmed by a key Resolution 1636 (2008) of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe. Its text notes that one of the indicators for the media in a democratic society is that “regulatory authorities for the broadcasting media must function in an unbiased and effective manner, for instance when granting licenses”.

Declaration of the Committee of Ministers on the independence and functions of regulatory authorities for the broadcasting sector provides as follows:

13. In most Council of Europe member states, the members of regulatory authorities are appointed by the parliament or by the head of state at the proposal of parliament. In some member states, in order to ensure that the membership of the regulatory authority reflects the country’s social and political diversity, part or all of the members are nominated by non-governmental groups which are considered to be representative of society. Further, in a few member states, the law provides objective selection criteria for the appointment of members.

By contrast, in a number of countries, members are appointed by sole decision of one state authority, e.g. the head of state or a state department, often without clearly specified selection criteria. The appointment of members of regulatory authorities by the head of state and/or parliament has sometimes been criticised advancing that, in such cases, membership would represent or reproduce political power structures.

14. Concerns have often been raised that the nominating or appointing bodies could exert pressure on the members after their appointment. In fact, in some member states, the members of regulatory authorities are frequently accused of acting on behalf of the state body that designated them or political formation behind the designating or appointing authority.

1.4 Public Service Broadcasting in the Digital Era

Held under the auspices of the OSCE Representative on Freedom of the Media in 2008, the 10th Central Asia Media Conference stated that public service broadcasting is one of the basic tools of democracies indispensable in ensuring the freedom and transparency of elections, in fighting against hate speech, and in protecting the minority cultures of a country by offering objective news reporting and by broadcasting high quality programmes. In the digital era, the importance of advertisement-free public-service broadcasting with high-quality and objective programming only increases.

Recommendation Rec(2007)3 of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe to member states on the remit of public service media in the information society of 31 January 2007 provides a focus on the implications of the new digital environment and the specific role of public service broadcasting in the information society. In its preamble, the Recommendation reaffirms that “the specific role of public service broadcasting as a unifying factor, capable of offering a wide choice of programmes and services to all sections of the population, should be maintained in the new digital environment”. It states that public service remit is all the more relevant in the digital era and can be offered via diverse platforms resulting in the emergence of public service media. The text recommends that member states guarantee the fundamental role of the public service media in the new digital environment; include provisions in their legislation/regulations specific to the remit of public service media, covering in particular the new communication services; guarantee public service media the financial and organizational conditions required to carry out the function entrusted to them in the new digital environment, in a transparent and accountable manner; enable public service media to respond fully and effectively to the challenges of the information society, respecting the dual structure of the European electronic media landscape of public and private broadcasters and paying attention to market and competition questions; and ensure that universal access to public service media is offered to all individuals and social groups.\textsuperscript{33}

Recommendation Rec(2003)9 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on measures to promote the democratic and social contribution of digital broadcasting is very specific as to the principles applicable to public service broadcasting in the new environment. The first principle has to do with the \textit{remit} of PSB. It insists that “faced with the challenges linked to the arrival of digital technologies, public service broadcasting should preserve its special social remit, including a basic general service that offers news, educational, cultural and entertainment programmes aimed at different categories of the public. Member states should create the financial, technical and other conditions required to enable public service broadcasters to fulfill this remit in the best manner while adapting to the new digital environment.”

The second principle relates to \textit{universal access} to public service broadcasting. “Universality is fundamental for the development of public service broadcasting in the digital era. Member states should therefore make sure that the legal, economic and technical conditions are created to enable public service broadcasters to be present on the different digital platforms (cable, satellite, terrestrial) with diverse quality programmes and services that are capable of uniting society, particularly given the risk of fragmentation of the audience as a result of the diversification and specialisation of the programmes on offer. In this connection, given the diversification of digital platforms, the must-carry rule should be applied for the benefit of public service broadcasters as far as reasonably possible in order to guarantee the accessibility of their services and programmes via these platforms”.

The third principle deals with issues of \textit{financing} public service broadcasting. “In the new technological context, without a secure and appropriate financing framework, the reach of public service broadcasters and the scale of their contribution to society may diminish. Faced with increases in the cost of acquiring, producing and storing programmes, and sometimes broadcasting costs, member states should give public service broadcasters the possibility of having access to the necessary financial means to fulfil their remit”.\textsuperscript{34}

Transition to the digital environment offers advantages, but also presents risks. Adequate preparations must be made for it so that it is carried out in the best possible conditions in the interest of the public, as well as of broadcasters and the audiovisual industry as a whole. Although during the transition a balance must be struck between economic interests and social needs, a citizens’ perspective must clearly be prioritized. In the coming years some significant switchover obstacles will have to be overcome, although the future benefits of digital broadcasting are indisputable.

States should develop a legislative framework and strategy for digital broadcasting. This recommendation to all national governments has been set out by the Council of Europe in its \textsuperscript{34} Appendix to Recommendation Rec(2003)9 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on measures to promote the democratic and social contribution of digital broadcasting.

Committee of Ministers Recommendation (2003)9 to member states on measures to promote the democratic and social contribution of digital broadcasting. This document provides that member states should “create adequate legal and economic conditions for the development of digital broadcasting”. In addition, it provides that states should draw up a well-defined strategy that would ensure a carefully thought-out transition from analogue to digital broadcasting. Such a strategy, which is particularly necessary for digital terrestrial television, “should seek to promote co-operation between operators, complementarity between platforms, the interoperability of decoders, the availability of a wide variety of content, including free-to-air radio and television services, and the widest exploitation of the unique opportunities which digital technology can offer following the necessary reallocation of frequencies”.35

The OSCE Representative on Freedom of the Media strongly believes that such a strategy should not be drafted and adopted as a result of closed-door negotiations between the businesses and the government, but be under constant scrutiny of a wide public discussion to guarantee the pluralism of broadcasting services and public access to an enlarged choice and variety of quality programmes as a result of the switchover. It is preferable that the adopted strategy would lead to new legislation introduced to and adopted by the parliament, rather than governmental decisions or presidential decrees. This will also help manage the transition without compromising legal certainty.

At the conferences devoted to the future of public-service broadcasting and the digital switchover held under the auspices of the OSCE Representative on Freedom of the Media in Almaty (10th Central Asia Media Conference, 16-17 October 2008) and in Tbilisi (5th South Caucasus Media Conference, 13-14 November 2008), participants expressed concern that with the digital switchover in force small local private broadcasters that operate over-the-air would not be able to afford to enter the market of digital TV without external help (e.g. stations like GALA-TV in Gyumri, Armenia). They are popular among local audiences, they are important for informational and political pluralism of the media, but the government tends to ignore them in the face of mounting costs of the switchover. Moreover, concern was raised that governments were even satisfied with the inability of small private broadcasters to reach their audience due to the digital switchover.

In this respect, the OSCE Representative on Freedom of the Media would like to reiterate that member states of the Council of Europe, while seeking ways of encouraging a rapid changeover to digital broadcasting, should make sure that the interests of the public, as well as the interests and constraints of all categories of broadcasters, particularly non-commercial and regional/local broadcasters, are taken into account. In this respect, an appropriate legal framework and favourable economic and technical conditions must be provided.36

1.5 Monitoring of obligations of Armenia

35 28 May 2003, 840the meeting of the Ministers’ Deputies.
36 Appendix to Recommendation Rec(2003)9 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on measures to promote the democratic and social contribution of digital broadcasting.
As a result of their negotiations to join the Council of Europe, Armenia undertook a number of commitments that were set out in a special memorandum. This was done pursuant to article 3 of the Statute of the Council of Europe, which requires each member to accept the principles of the rule of law and of the enjoyment by all persons within its jurisdiction of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and collaborate sincerely and effectively in the realization of the aim of the Council (Statute of the Council of Europe, 1949).

The memorandum for Armenia of 28 June 2000 records the need for various reforms to media laws and structures. The authorities undertook commitments, firstly, to pass a new media law within a year, and secondly, to "transform the national television station into a public-service broadcaster managed by an independent body". The new broadcasting law was passed in 2000 and the state broadcaster transformed into public-service in 2001.

On 26 September 2002 at the session of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe the Committee on the Honouring of Obligations and Commitments by Member States of the Council of Europe presented its report on Armenia. The document (in its section on freedom of expression) notes in particular that while Armenia has adopted a broadcasting law, it is imperfect and is not satisfactory by Council of Europe standards. Besides, the law is hotly contested by the media themselves, primarily because the members of the Council of the Public TV and Radio Company and the National Commission on Television and Radio (the bodies that regulate public and private broadcasting, respectively) are appointed by the President. Secondly, "the technical standards laid down are so high that private television companies might find them impossible to comply with, and consequently lose their license". PACE adopted Resolution 1304 (2002) on honouring of obligations and commitments by Armenia. The resolution says that since its accession on 25 January 2001 Armenia has made substantial progress towards honouring the obligations and commitments it accepted. As to the media legislation, considering that the allocation of the radio and television broadcasting licenses gave rise to strong protests in April 2002, PACE called on the Armenian authorities "to amend the law on broadcasting without delay, taking into account the recommendations made by the Council of Europe" and remind the authorities of the country about their "firm commitment to organize a new call for tenders for new frequencies on October 25, 2002".

Resolution 1361 (2004) adopted on 27 January 2004 by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe “Honouring of obligations and commitments by Armenia” notes in its paragraph 19:

As regards freedom of expression and media pluralism, the Assembly is concerned at developments in the audiovisual media in Armenia and expresses serious doubts as to pluralism in the electronic media, regretting in particular that the vagueness of the law in force has resulted in the National Television and Radio Commission being given outright discretionary powers in the award of broadcasting licences, in particular as regards the television channel A1+.

37 All texts adopted by PACE can be found at: http://assembly.coe.int/ASP/Doc/ATListing_E.asp.
Resolution 1374 (2004) adopted by PACE on 28 April 2004 «Honouring of obligations and commitments by Armenia» calls to «create fair conditions for the normal functioning of the media, for example, as regards the issuing of broadcasting licences to television companies, in particular, to television channel A1+”.

Resolution 1458 (2005) “Constitutional reform process in Armenia” adopted by the Assembly on 23 June 2005 calls upon the Armenian authorities to “implement without delay the Assembly recommendations with regard to media pluralism in order to guarantee the broadest possible public debate”.

On 23 January 2007, at the plenary session of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe Resolution 1532 (2007) on Armenia's honouring of obligations and commitments to the CoE was adopted. The Resolution noted that the draft broadcasting law package drawn up by the government without prior consultation with media or Council of Europe representatives met with strong criticism, not least concerning the membership of the National Commission of Television and Radio and the method of appointment of its members. In this regard the Assembly urged the Armenian authorities to consult Council of Europe experts and take into account their recommendations before adopting amendments to the law “On Television and Radio” (clause 6.2.1). The Assembly also called on authorities to adopt an open, transparent process of appointing members of the Council of Public TV and Radio Company in accordance with the recommendations of the Venice Commission (clause 6.2.2), as well as take steps to ensure freedom and pluralism of public television and radio on a day-to-day basis (clause 6.2.3).

On 17 April 2008 the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe adopted Resolution 1609 (2008) “The Functioning of Democratic Institutions in Armenia”. Clause 8 of the adopted Resolution recalls the commitments of Armenia to the Council of Europe and urges once more the Armenian authorities to undertake a number of reforms without delay. In particular, item 8.3 of the Resolution stipulates: “The independence from any political interest of both National Commission on Television and Radio and the Council of Public Television and Radio must be guaranteed. In addition, the composition of these bodies should be revised in order to ensure that they are truly representative of Armenian society. The recommendations made by the Venice Commission and Council of Europe experts in this respect must finally be taken into account. The Assembly reiterates that apart from reforming the legislation, the authorities must take steps to ensure freedom and pluralism of the public television and radio on a day-to-day basis. Also, the harassment by the tax authorities of opposition electronic and printed media outlets must be stopped.”

“The granting of a license to this independent and popular TV channel has been a long-standing demand of the Assembly. We urge the authorities to grant the broadcasting license to this channel without further delay”, the report of the Monitoring Committee stressed. Resolution 1620 (2008) quotes the four main requirements of the Resolution 1609 (2008) and calls “to initiate an open and serious dialogue between all political forces in Armenia” with regard to a number of issues, including freedom and pluralism of the media (paragraph 1.4). Paragraph 6 of Resolution 1620 (2008) says: “The Assembly recalls that there is a need for a pluralistic electronic media environment in Armenia and, referring to the decision of the European Court of Human Rights concerning the denial of broadcasting license to ‘A1+’, calls on the licensing authority to now ensure an open, fair and transparent licensing procedure, in line with the guidelines, adopted by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe on 26 March 2008 and with the case law of the European Court of Human Rights.”

On 27 January 2009 the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe adopted Resolution 1643 (2009) “The Implementation by Armenia of Assembly Resolutions 1609 (2008) and 1620 (2008)” was approved. Clause 10 of the Resolution deals with the situation in the media domain. Thus, in item 10.1 the PACE “welcomes the proposals made with a view to ensuring the independence of the media regulatory bodies in Armenia and calls upon the authorities to fully implement the forthcoming recommendations of the Council of Europe experts in this regard”. Item 10.2 of the Resolution refers to the amendment to the RA Law “On Television and Radio”, adopted by the Armenian parliament on 10 September 2008, according to which the conductance of broadcast licensing competitions is suspended until 20 July 2010 due to the need to prepare the transition from analogue to digital broadcasting. With this item the PACE underlines that “the technical requirements for the introduction of digital broadcasting should not be used by the authorities to unduly delay the holding of an open, fair and transparent tender for broadcasting licenses, as demanded by the Assembly”.

II. ANALYSIS OF THE DRAFT AMENDMENTS TO THE BROADCASTING LAW

2.1 Methodology and general comments

This review analyzes the above draft legislation from the point of the international obligations of the Republic of Armenia as a member of the OSCE, international standards (see above), as well as the constitutional provisions of Armenia and its basic acts such as the Law “On the Mass Media”.

Also noted were earlier analyses of the draft laws on broadcasting made in April 2009 by the OSCE expert Dr. Andrei Richter and in September 2008 by the OSCE expert Prof. Katrin Nyman-Metcalf, as well as the analysis of the Concept Paper on migrating to digital radio and TV broadcasting system in Armenia jointly done by the two experts in April 2010 and presented by them in Yerevan in May 2010.

In this regard note was taken that in the Introduction to the above-mentioned Concept Paper which makes a foundation to the draft law (see the Justification to the draft law) a special reference was made to honour the Recommendation Rec(2003)9 of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe to member states on measures to promote the democratic and social contribution of digital broadcasting.

The Justification to the draft law states that it was prepared in conformity with the Order of the RA President dated 6 May 2009 on Approving the List of Actions Ensuring the Implementation of the Republic of Armenia-European Union Action Plan within the European Neighbourhood Policy (ENP). To remind the Order of the President states that the primary objectives and priority measures of the implementation actions here are as follows (point 21):

«Implementation of consistent steps to secure freedom of Media, development of an open and transparent process for appointing members of the public and private broadcasting sector regulatory body, securing the independence of the broadcasting licenses providing and controlling body, ensuring continuous steps towards securing freedom and pluralism to public and private Media...»

In its turn the Strategy Paper of the ENP (2005) declares as follows:

40 See their texts in Armenian and in English at: http://www.osce.org/fom/documents.html?lsi=true&limit=10&grp=294

“The EU wishes to see reinforced, credible and sustained commitment towards democracy, the rule of law, respect for human rights, and progress towards the development of a market economy. These common values also underlie the membership of Armenia, Azerbaijan and Georgia in the Council of Europe and OSCE.”

The Action Plan sets the following specific action for Armenia in Priority area 2 (“Strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, in compliance with international commitments of Armenia (PCA, CoE, OSCE, UN)

“Ensure the independence of media by strengthening the independent regulatory body for public and private broadcasters, being responsible for awarding broadcasting licenses and supervision”.

Still according to the latest European Neighbourhood Policy EU-Armenia Action Plan Implementation Progress Report released on 12 May 2010 by the Commission of the European Communities believes that “the composition and the means of appointment of members of the broadcasting regulatory bodies raise questions regarding their full independence”.

Very few of the earlier recommendations by the OSCE experts were taken into account in the new draft law. An example of the change is a mistake in the draft 2009 law (A. 32) suggested that “the executive directors of the Public Television Company and the Public Radio Company shall be appointed and dismissed by a two-thirds vote of the Council members”. Since the Council for Public Television and Radio consists of five members, two-thirds of five make 3,3333 members of the Council. This norm did not make sense and was replaced with a norm that speaks of a “simple majority” of the Council members (para 8 of Art. 30 of the draft law). Yet now the draft law speaks of the “half of the Council members” (para 3 of Art. 28): with five members total half of that figure presents two and a half members of the Council. We again suggest changing such wordings.

This review will not further discuss minor amendments that were introduced with the aim of uniformity or clarity of the law. Instead, it will focus on amendments that are of principal importance.

The draft law presents a new edition of the Law of the Republic of Armenia “On television and radio” (LA-97, of 9 October 2000, as amended). Most recently this law was extensively amended in 2009. The new edition in our view does not drastically reword the current law on television and the radio. The draft law does not introduce new approaches to regulation of broadcasting, but rather updates it in some aspects that are related mostly to the digital switchover. Overall majority of the articles are the same as in the acting law, although their order sometimes changes. All liability provisions are grouped in a new chapter (8) of the draft law.

In general the draft law is proposed in such a way that does not show amendments to be introduced, they can be found only in an article after article comparison of the texts. This creates problems in its evaluation and discussion of the amendments in public and in the parliament.

2.2 Positive changes introduced by the amendments

The draft law contains a few new positive changes into the current broadcasting regulation of Armenia. They are as follows:

2.3.1) Para 2 Art. 18 of the draft law stipulates that physical persons and persons related to them may act as a founder and (or) participant of no more than one licenced person implementing on-air broadcasting. This adds force to the anti-trust provisions in the current law (Art. 20), which says that each physical or legal entity can be licensed only for one television or radio company but does not limit possibility of a person to found several companies of his own that will eventually obtain a license each. The new legal regulation may assist in more plurality in the broadcasting sphere.

2.3.2) Point 5 of para 2 Art. 39 of the draft law forbids members of the National Assembly of the Republic of Armenia, the Government of the Republic of Armenia, staff members of the President of the Republic’s Office and other state servants become members of the National Television and Radio Commission. This provision will serve more independence of the licensing authority from the government.

2.3.3) Art. 55 of the draft law extends the licence term for over-the-air broadcasters from 7 to 10 years. This measure ensures a higher level of stability for private broadcasters that enables them to invest into equipment and programming that eventually leads to benefits for the public.

2.3 Disregard of European standards

Harmonisation of the national law with the European conventions is important for further integration of Armenia into the European Community which is part of the national policy of the Republic of Armenia.

The draft law defines and operates a number of terms and concepts anew and ignores that they have already been developed in the sphere of broadcasting and audiovisual media services in Europe. We have in mind the European Convention on Transfrontier Television of the Council of Europe and its parallel instrument in the European Union – the Audiovisual Media Services Directive.

For example Art. 14 of the draft law regulates sponsorship of television and radio programmes. Many of the new norms are similar to those of Art. 17 and 18 of Chapter IV (“Sponsorship”) of the European Convention on Transfrontier Television. At the same time, with a view of a possible and desirable signature and ratification by Armenia of this most important European instrument in the field of television, it is advisable that the amendments openly follow the rules set by the Convention and adopted elsewhere in Europe. For example, that they provide for a clearer view of the nature of sponsorship by stating that:

"Sponsorship" means the participation of a natural or legal person, who is not engaged in broadcasting activities or in the production of audiovisual works, in the direct or indirect financing of a programme with a view to promoting the name, trademark, image or activities of that person.

Useful will be also to borrow from these European documents definitions and rules for “works of domestic origin” (Art. 8), foreign works (Art. 12), and re-broadcasting of foreign programmes (Art. 7). In this regard the quote of 65 percent of domestic programmes by far exceeds European standards and puts a heavy economic burden on Armenian private broadcasters.

An important issue is the language of broadcasting. One view here is that States should rely on public service broadcasting in order to promote plurality, social cohesion and language rights, thus relieving the need for the regulation, in this respect, of the private sector.47 In any case some of the restrictions on the use of foreign languages in broadcasting seem to be groundless and excessive (for example, the demand that programmes in the languages of the national minorities be accompanied by Armenian subtitles – para 5 d) of Art. 26).

Speaking of the broadcasting programmes in minority languages, the draft law stipulates that “the overall number of hours of these programmes must not exceed 2 hours per week on television, and 1 hour per day on the radio”. Unless it is a wrong translation we see a paradox when the law provides for a maximum, not a minimum quota of programmes for the minorities in public broadcasting (para 5 d) of Art. 26).

The above-mentioned discrepancies lead to contradictions of the draft law with the European legal standards of broadcasting and other audiovisual media services.

Recommendation:

- Apply definitions and rules developed in the sphere of broadcasting and audiovisual media services in pan-European international conventions and treaties.

2.4 Regulation of licensing in the digital era

The draft law bypasses important issues of procedure of licensing satellite broadcasting. It removes differences between over-the-air, wire, cable broadcasting and satellite broadcasting and merges them into one basic form. The draft simply states that satellite broadcasting is licensed by the NTRC but fails to provide information on how such a licence can be obtained, under what conditions and obligations. There is no regulation by law of mobile and Internet-provided broadcasting while in practice such regulation is enforced. These norms compromising legal certainty seem to be not an incidental omission but a deliberate attempt to put all forms and types of audiovisual media services under strict regime of licensing (or permissions) of the NTRC and subject them to bureaucratic scrutiny and discretion.

The draft law removes from the current obligations of the National Commission a demand to make public at least once a year the frequency plan or list. This makes the procedures of licensing and tenders, the exact capacity and number of multiplexes blurred and subject to different interpretations and bureaucratic discretion. Moreover since the radiofrequency spectrum is in use for the public benefit the public should be informed on the use of the spectrum and its capacity to serve public good in broadcasting.

For example the law does not substantiate why the “capital transmission” will consist of 9 programmes, while the “national transmission” – 8 programmes. How many multiplexes are in mind here? Are there reserve programmes? Why if the law (para 1 Art. 30) stipulates that the Public Television and Radio Company will have a minimum of two television programmes, the allocation of the digital TV channels provides for maximum two television programmes for the Public Television and Radio Company – “in conformity with paragraph one of Article 30”? We see no conformity here, but limitation of the powers of the Council that determines the actual number of such channels.

It does not specify the number or thematic direction of radio programmes on national and capital multiplexes although at the OSCE seminar in Yerevan on 18 May 2010 the expert from the Ministry of Economy stated that there would be 4 radio channels on each of the 4 multiplexes. The law does not provide explanation to this omission.

The draft law stipulates that “in order to create a private network of digital broadcasting by legal persons starting from 1 January 2015, the procedure and terms for multiplexer licensing may be established by law” (para 11 Art. 62). In this way the law indefinitely delays the possibility to establish private multiplexers for digital television and radio while in para 9 of the same article it orders analogue broadcasting to be terminated in the entire territory of the Republic of Armenia on 20 July 2013. Thus it makes deliberate barriers on the establishment of private operators of digital broadcasting, local or national, violates all competition rules and guarantees of the equality of the forms of property. The analogue programmes that are in existence now and will be switched-off in two years have no legal clarity not to speak of state support in regards of alternative ways of broadcasting via private operators or otherwise. We do not understand how this follows the aim to “contribute to the development of the information market and free competition” stated in the Justification to the draft law. The above provision leads to limitations of the plurality of information with the transfer to digital broadcasting in Armenia.

We understand that in Armenia the dominant network operator is the state-owned or previously state-owned company, Television and Radio Broadcasting Network of Armenia CJSC, or TRBNA, but digitalisation should not be seen as a means to cement the dominance of this body.
The involvement of the telecommunications regulatory body is important. Privatisation in the broadcasting network sector should proceed nevertheless and digitalisation not be used as an excuse to maintain a higher state involvement. In Armenia, the broadcasting transmitter network is separate from the broadcasters. Regardless of the public ownership of the transmission network, access provisions must be strictly applied and transmission ownership should never mean any interference of the network in broadcasting content.

Recommendations:

- The draft law should be clear in regards of regulating satellite, mobile, Internet-provided broadcasting and non-linear audiovisual media services.
- The current obligations of the National Commission to make public at least once a year the frequency plan or list should be kept in the draft law.
- The draft law should be specific in relation to the number or thematic direction of radio programmes on national and capital multiplexes.
- The draft law should lay legal grounds for the establishment of non-state operators of digital broadcasting.

Art. 22 of the draft law provides a long list of programmes and their elements that if broadcast lead to a termination of the term of the license by a sole decision of the NTRC (Art. 61).

For example, point 3 of para 1 Art. 22 of the draft law prohibits to use broadcasting for dissemination of state or other secret protected by law.

In this regard, it should be noted that the Law of Republic of Armenia “On Mass Media” in Art. 9 para 3 clearly stipulates that:

> “The implementer of media activity is not liable for dissemination of secret information as stipulated by law, provided the information in question was lawfully obtained, or it was not apparent that the information was secret according to the law.

> If the implementer of media activity has disseminated information the secret nature of which has been evident, it will be exempt from liability if dissemination of information was done for the sake of protecting public interest.”

These exceptions stated in the law “On the Mass Media” in conformity with the international standards will thus be violated by the draft law under review.

In this context let us note that the OSCE Representative on Freedom of the Media has recommended that whistleblowers of all forms should not be prosecuted: Whistleblowers who disclose secret information of public interest to the media should not be subject to legal, administrative or employment-related sanctions.

The CoE Parliamentary Assembly has also recommended that secrets laws should ensure that whistleblowers are protected. The 2007 PA Resolution states that member states should:

\[L]\text{ook into ways and means of enhancing the protection of whistle-blowers and journalists, who expose corruption, human rights violations, environmental destruction or other abuses of public authority, in all Council of Europe member states.}\text{\textsuperscript{50}}

Another example: point 8 of para 1 Art. 22 of the draft law prohibits to use broadcasting “with a view to defaming or violating the rights of others and the presumption of innocence. Defamation to be soon decriminalized in Armenia even today is almost always a civil offence and may not be used to shut down a media outlet. This would violate all possible perceptions of proportionality under the rule of law. Article 21 of the Constitution of the Republic of Armenia describes presumption of innocence in the following norm:

\text{Everyone charged with a criminal offence shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty by the court judgment lawfully entered into force as prescribed by law.}

Thus presumption of innocence has a limited character (those charged with a criminal offence only) and relates to the court procedures rather than the operations of a broadcaster. Therefore the offence of violation of this presumption may not be used to terminate a broadcasting licence by an administrative decision.

Some other points of para 1 Art. 22 (worship of cruelty, disparaging the family, pornography, etc.) are too vague to be used by an administrative body even so authoritative at the NTRC.

This provision obviously leads to self-censorship of journalists and limitations of freedom of the media.

\textbf{Recommendation:}
\end{center}

\begin{itemize}
\item \textit{Eliminate procedures in the draft law that violate international standards and contradict national legislation of Armenia regarding possibility of arbitrary abolishment of the freedom of expression and freedom of the mass media in case of violations by broadcasters of Article 22.}
\end{itemize}

\section*{2.6 Independence of broadcast regulators}

Art. 33 of the draft law introduces in para 1 the following norm:

\textsuperscript{50}Recommendation 1792 (2007) Fair trial issues in criminal cases concerning espionage or divulging state secrets, \textsection{1.2.}
Each year in the section of expenditures of the state budget of the Republic of Armenia and in case of an increase in the section of revenues compared with the previous year, allocations not less than the allocations in the state budget for the previous year are granted to the Public Television and Radio Company. These allocations must ensure the exercise of the powers of the Council prescribed by law.

A similar norm is provided in para 2 of Art. 42 of the draft law in relation to the National Commission. “Exercise of powers” can be of different scale and quality, and its level depends on the scale of budgetary allocations. Financial independence of the governing bodies shall be further discussed in the context of these norms, but the unclear character of the norms should be emphasized from the beginning.

Thus para 1 of Art. 33 and para 2 of Art. 42 of the draft law stipulate for mechanisms of financing activities of the Public Television and Radio Company, the Council for Public Television and Radio and the National Commission on Television and Radio (NTRC) from the state budget. They both state that the allocations shall ensure the functioning of the Council and the Commission. They provide for allocations for the Public Television and Radio Company and the Commission in an amount increasing at a rate at least equal to the increase of the revenue side of the state budget over the previous year – granted growth of the budget.

At the same time, there is no mention in the draft law as to whether or when the allocations will decrease and under what circumstances. There is no guarantee, especially today, that the revenue side of the budget will be growing. If it does not, will the public broadcaster, the Council and the NTRC suffer? Why would funding of the public broadcasting and independent regulatory body be dependent on the revenues of the state and to what degree? It is clear that the proposed scheme provides for the majority in the parliament to sanction or support the NTRC at ease, thus making the NTRC dependent on such a majority. This way, instead of fulfilling their public duty, the “independent public broadcaster” and the “independent regulator” will exercise self-censorship. This provision also compromises legal certainty of the NTRC and of public broadcasting.

Given the economic situation in Armenia, it is probably not advisable to introduce licence fees incurred on TV set owners to fund public broadcasting. This is not the only method to financially support its independence from the government.51

We also note with regret that the draft law no longer provides that the National Commission of Television and Radio (NCTR) is obliged to properly explain its decision to reject an application for a broadcast license; neither the draft law puts responsibility on the NCTR to promote diversity of opinion on the airwaves. The fact that the draft law establishes thematic directions of the digital 51 In Lithuania, for example, similar body is funded by a monthly levy on all broadcasters that earn money from advertising (apart from the public broadcasting company), set at 0.8 percent of their income from advertising and other commercial activities to do with transmission and (or) retransmission. It is also important to prevent the state from directly controlling public service television and from directly or indirectly impinging on its editorial independence and institutional autonomy. To this end, in Latvia state funding may not be reduced to below the level of the preceding year, and in Georgia it may not fall below 0.12 per cent of GDP.

TV channels should not remove these obligations of the national regulator. On the contrary these obligations should be enforced so that the new longer-term licences be issued in a democratic procedure and in conformity with the European standards.

\textbf{2.7 Selection of members of the Council on Public Television and Radio} \\
\hline
There are substantial flaws in the draft law (Art. 27-34) that regard selection and appointment of the members of the Council for Public Television and Radio.

The Council for Public Television and Radio is the management body of the Public Television and Radio Company (Art. 27). Art. 30 of the draft law defines jurisdiction (competence) of the Council of Public Television and Radio Broadcasting Company. We note that it was somewhat transformed from a programmatic and ideological to a more technical and personnel kind of competence.

The Council comprises five members (at least one of the members is a woman) who are appointed by the President of the Republic of Armenia in conformity with the tendering procedure established solely by him (her).

The criteria for selecting candidates to the Council are vague (Art. 27). The candidates are supposed by the oath to be faithful to the Constitution and laws of the Republic of Armenia, to defend the human rights and fundamental freedoms, to support the formation of civil society by means of ensuring the right of expression, freedom of information and pluralism. They shall perform their duties impartially, with the utmost good faith and integrity, will act on the principle of publicity, impartiality and justice. Yet, if by law members of the Council do not represent political and ideological minorities, it is doubtful that they can in practice ensure pluralism. Also important is that – based on the method of their appointment (by Presidential order) – neither do they represent pluralistic views.

The Council members are appointed for six years and may not be recalled with some exceptions, like death, voluntary resignation or lost of citizenship. Here we see that if appointed to another position a Council member can easily be recalled (para 3 subpara 2 of Art. 29). Thus by appointing a Council member to serve as, for example, the ambassador to a foreign country, the President of the Republic of Armenia makes the position vacant thus violating the principle of irremovability of its members.

\end{center}
Thus the law reaffirms Armenia's current method of constituting its public service broadcasting regulator which attracts constant criticism from European bodies. In this regard, it is worth reiterating the earlier remarks by the OSCE Representative on Freedom of the Media that the Council of Public TV and Radio Company “should not be selected by one political force or by political forces alone”.

Recommendations:

- Reform the system of selecting and appointing members of the Council for Public Television and Radio in order to provide for a possibility of a pluralistic public broadcasting and freedom of expression and information.
- The Council should not be selected by one political force or by a political force alone.
- The appointments are to be done through a politically neutral procedure.

2.8 Potential conflict of the two regulators over activities of the public broadcaster

The draft law in a number of articles puts public broadcasting under control of the National Commission on Television and Radio (NTRC).

For example, the NTRC shall oversee activities of the Public Television and Radio Company (para 1 of Art. 35 of the draft law). In other cases the draft law speaks about the NTRC jurisdiction over broadcasting companies without separating them into public and private ones. Intrusion of the NTRC into programming of public broadcasting would result in a number of problems.

It would make the broadcaster dependent on two overseeing bodies – the Council and the Commission – appointed (elected) differently and as a result possibly issuing different or even conflicting orders.

There is no clear division of the two bodies’ competences with regard to public broadcasting, thus leading to further conflicts over boundaries of such a division. For example, it is not clearly stated if the NTRC is allowed to warn, fine and suspend functioning of a public TV or radio programme, or use other administrative sanctions towards it. It is not clear whether the NTRC will issue and revoke licences to the public broadcasters along the rules of licensing accepted by the draft law.

Recommendation:

- Remove Public Television and Radio from the competence of the National Commission on Television and Radio, and place it under the sole authority of the Council for Public Television and Radio to provide legal certainty.

CONCLUSION

In a number of its resolutions, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe (PACE) has called upon the authorities of Armenia to guarantee the independence from any political interest of both the National Commission on Television and Radio and the Council of Public Television and Radio and take steps to ensure freedom and pluralism of public television and radio.

The Office of the OSCE Representative on Freedom of the Media has consistently come out in support of preparing a more liberal law on broadcasting in Armenia, which would envisage participation of non-governmental organizations in its drafting and would facilitate the promotion of freedom of expression and freedom of the media in Armenia.

The proposed version of the Draft Law, however, raises doubts that PACE resolutions, as well as the numerous appeals of the OSCE Representative on Freedom of the Media concerning the legislation on broadcasting, have been adequately reflected in the draft law proposed for discussion. Besides, most of the earlier recommendations have been completely ignored.

Under these circumstances, the Office of the OSCE Representative on Freedom of the Media urges the National Assembly to convene a working group that includes representatives of journalistic non-governmental organizations, opposition parliamentarians and other stakeholders, and work on a fundamental revision of the draft law, fully taking into account the remarks and suggestions of the working group members, as well as the recommendations of international organizations and their experts.
