625th Plenary Meeting

FSC Journal No. 631, Agenda item 1

STATEMENT BY THE DELEGATION OF THE UNITED KINGDOM

Mr. Chairperson,

I am pleased to announce that the UK Government published its National Security Strategy (NSS) on 18 October 2010, and on 19 October published the results of a Strategic Defence and Security Review (SDSR). Both documents are available electronically from the following website: <http://www.cabinetoffice.gov.uk>.

In a fast changing world, the first duty of government remains the security of our country. Taken together these documents set out the strategic vision for the Government's approach to defence and security, and explain in detail how we will deliver that vision. Together they will deliver a step change in Britain's ability to protect its security interests, whilst providing the direction for national policy, capabilities and resources.

I would like to highlight for you some of the key conclusions. Firstly, we are clear that the United Kingdom will continue to play an active and engaged role around the world. We believe that it is in our national interest. We recognize that the security challenges that we face are changing and we will be engaged and adaptable in our response. We will seek to identify and act on threats and opportunities early, to avoid the higher costs of addressing them when they develop. We will work more closely with our allies and international partners to maximise our effect in tackling shared threats. To deliver this we will be joining up national security activity more effectively across Government, both in the United Kingdom and overseas.

In undertaking this review we have had to prioritize rigorously and make some tough choices about which capabilities to protect, which to cut back, and which to enhance. However we have set out a plan over the next decade to ensure that we have the capabilities, including military, which we require to meet the challenges and opportunities of the future.

Close engagement with our key allies and partners will remain a fundamental part of our approach to defence and security. Some issues of the greatest interest will be how SDSR and the associated spending cuts will affect the interests of this organization. At www.cabinetoffice.gov.uk you will also be able to find twenty factsheets for those seeking further information.

Mr. Chairperson, we ask that this statement be attached to the journal of the meeting.
